FOREWORD

As we unlearn to reconcile with the journey of life every day, we have learned more about how to navigate through an unusual journey called a pandemic. Adversities have taught us to invent ways and means to continue living with the usual demeanor, and have made us resilient to respond to crises again and again. The saddening memory fills our hearts with remorse and helplessness for the precious life lost to COVID-19. During such moments, we realized that we were held together by a strong humanitarian bond, which helped us overcome collective grief; it gave us strength to remain hopeful, even after seeing the nation at the doorstep of impending peril. The year has seen a phenomenal rise in the tragedies of the common. Return of the migrant workers to their villages, people covering hundreds of miles on foot to reach home, loss of employment, unyielding miseries, and inequality in alien and fearful form. The pandemic has curtailed the scope of interacting with people directly. Remaining strictly within the COVID norm, project staff endured the hassles of lockdown and shutdown to implement the activities, ignoring their pressing need on the domestic and personal front. Fulfilling the mandate of empowering the slum dwellers required intensive physical interaction, which was quite unfeasible during the COVID-19 surge, but was achieved most uncompromisingly. Social facilitation has been instrumental in forging deep ties with the community, understanding their need, and helping them overcome the difficulties of daily life. Connecting them with the regular process of empowerment was possible because of the committed effort of the project resources, as they had remained constantly with communities throughout the period. When fear of COVID was looming at large, we took the help of technology to reach to the community members.

Human rights violations are deep and insidious, they happen in all societies across the world, in different proportions. When governance becomes participatory through democratic institutions, administrative control may turn people-centric, and HRVs may gradually reduce. We took the onus of striking a balance between the emerging issues of HRVs and responses of the government machinery and democratic institutions. We had persevered to bring to the public domain such happenings which could lead to the delivery of justice or bring the desired flexibility in the system, to respond to the need for structural change in the future. I am pleased to bring the Annual Report 2022-23 to its present form. The report presents a brief overview of the activities implemented, their results, and their outcomes.

Find the Report

Police in India face accusations of misconduct and human rights violations, including illegal detention, torture, and extrajudicial killings, which deny justice and undermine the rule of law. These illegalities disproportionately affect vulnerable communities like Dalits and Adivasis, who face police harassment and biases when reporting crimes. The Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, enacted in 1989 and amended in 2015, aims to punish police officials who neglect their duties in registering complaints from victims. However, five years after the amendments, there is little attention given to action taken against police under this provision.

The report reviews the use and impact of Section 4 of the Atrocities Act in holding police accountable in Odisha, highlighting gaps in the inquiry process and recommending solutions.

Education of Migrant Worker's Children Working in Brick-line Factory

During the COVID-19 pandemic period, CSNR had given little focus on the education of the children of tribal and other forest dwellers as a quick intervention. Near Kantapada Block, Cuttack there were migrant labourers belonging mostly to tribal families working in brick-line factories. They came as seasonal migrant workers for six months but it is their culture that they come with all their family members including school-going children.

So their education got fully affected here living with the family in the brick-line factory. Sometimes they fall prey to exploitation. Considering the above issue, CSNR had engaged a girl from the same locality to support as a teacher and provide education to more than 40 neglected children. A house was also constructed by mobilizing contributions from the community and individuals

Study in 4 States

No time for family concern for most women cops

Basic amenities like toilet, rest room, transport elude many
 About 14.02% women police personnel from Odisha do not have access to clean toilets, whereas only 8.5% have access to clean washrooms. Similarly, 21.6% expressed that they do not have a rest room. 17.37% expressed their difficulty in not having transportation facilities during odd hours of work.
 A report on "Challenges of Women Police Personnel" conducted by the Centre for the Sustainable Use of Natural and Social Resources (CSNR), which was funded at the National Academy of Broadcasting and Multimedia (NABM), Bhubaneswar, on Sunday, revealed this. The report makes a detailed analysis of multi-dimensionality of the challenges confronted by police women of four states including Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand and Bihar, apart from Odisha. The report said across the States, women respondents face similar challenges and their perception of the gravity of the difficulties they face due to various challenges is more or less same. It is found that no time for family as well as self is the most piercing concern for most respondents across the four States. Cumulatively, one day of weekly leave, availability of basic facilities like clean and separate toilet, rest room, transportation etc and circle are the top three ranked facilities that women police who participated in the study want. Besides, contractual employment is not a favourable mode of employment to be adopted in the police department. The recommendations made in the report are fixed hours of work, one day of weekly off, clean and hygienic toilets, maintenance of menstrual hygiene and rest during this time every month. Besides, it was suggested to the State Governments to adopt the provision of child care leave to a female member of the service in the All-India Service (Leave) rules 1955 and implement it in letter and spirit in the police departments. The dignitaries present on the occasion were Chairperson, State Commission for Women Dr Minati Behera, former DGP, Odisha Manmohan Prharaj, former DGP, Jharkhand Gourisankar Rath, Editor Utkal Prasanga and Odisha Review Kartari Mohapatra and lawyer Sujata Jena. The study report is a result of an extensive research, conducted by Dr Sushmita Parida, faculty of Manjuli University, Bishakha Bhanja, NAWO Odisha Chapter, managed the event.
